War in Europe would affect Honolulu in many ways, say local bankers and sugar men—Cut down labor supply for one

One of the first results of the receipt here of the news that Europe appears to be on the verge of a blaze of war, was the anxiety manifested by the reservists belonging to the French and German armies, who are now living in Honolulu. Some large firms, where there are a number of German reservists at work, were more or less upset by the receipt of the information that the Kaiser may call upon his sons in foreign lands to go to the assistance of the Vaterland.
